CA ADVISORY NOTE

Why ROC Compliance Should Not Be Left for the Last Week

Category: ROC Updates

ROC compliance is not only a filing task. It depends on accurate board records, financial statement readiness, statutory registers, shareholder data, and timely approvals. Leaving the process for the last week increases the risk of document gaps, errors, additional fees, and avoidable stress.

Companies should maintain compliance calendars and review changes in directors, shareholding, registered office, loans, and related party transactions throughout the year. A disciplined process keeps the company audit-ready and improves governance confidence.
